1. Henrik Ibsen: The Wild Duck	1
2. Christopher Marlowe: The Tragedie of Doctor Faustus (B text)	10
3. Herman Melville: Moby-Dick or, The Whale	35
4. William Shakespeare: Titus Andronicus	38
5. Oscar Wilde: The Importance of Being Earnest	44

1. Henrik Ibsen: The Wild Duck

The following example is a fragment (the front matter, and pages 102 to 105, belonging to the fifth act) of Henrik Ibsen's play The Wild Duck, encoded and made available by the University of Virginia Library, for their Text Collection.

The text of the play is preceded by front matter, consisting of a title page, and a table of contents.

The body of the play (`body`) consists of 5 acts, in which no further scenes are discerned. Acts are encoded in `div1` elements, with an "act" value for their `@type` attributes. The first act is preceded by a character list, encoded in a separate `div1` element, of `@type` "section". This character list is transcribed as part of the text's body, in the form of a simple `list`, with role names and descriptions as plain text inside `item` elements. Inside the same `div1` element, the cast list is followed by two paragraphs (`p`). As descriptions of global aspects of the play's settings, they could have been wrapped in a more expressive `set` element, were they transcribed as part of the text's `front` part (`set` is only allowed as a child element of `front`). Inside the acts, each speech is marked with `sp`, indicating the speaker as it occurs in the source (`speaker`), without formal reference to the character's "definition" in the cast list. This link could be provided with a `@who` attribute on `sp`.

Stage instructions are encoded inside `stage`. The speeches are encoded as prose paragraphs (`p`). Notice, however, how this encoding makes abstraction of physical lines: these are explicitly encoded using the `lb` element.

Besides the regular drama elements, this fragment also contains one footnote, which is transcribed as:

```
<note place="foot" xml:id="note5">
  <seg type="note-symbol">"Livslognen,"</seg>
  literally "the life-lie."
</note>

right before the corresponding page break (`pb`). From this encoding it is not clear, however, whether this is a transcribed authorial annotation, or an annotation made by the editor; the `@resp` attribute could have avoided this confusion. Moreover, as it apparently concerns a translation, the contents of the note could have been encoded more semantically as a `term` - `gloss` pair. The note indicator in the running text is encoded as `ref target="#note5">`*`/ref` where it occurs in the text.

<speaker>Relling.</speaker>
 Most people are, worse luck.
</sp>
<sp>
<speaker>Gregers.</speaker>
 And what remedy are you applying in Hialmar's case?
</sp>
<sp>
<speaker>Relling.</speaker>
 My usual one. I am cultivating the life-illusion<ref target="#note5">*</ref> in him.
</sp>
<sp>
<speaker>Gregers.</speaker>
 Life-illusion? I didn't catch what you said.
</sp>
<sp>
<speaker>Relling.</speaker>
 Yes, I said illusion. For illusion, you know, is the stimulating principle.
</sp>
<sp>
<speaker>Gregers.</speaker>
 May I ask with what illusion Hialmar is inoculated?
</sp>
<sp>
<speaker>Relling.</speaker>
 No, thank you; I don't betray professional secrets to quacksalvers. You would probably go and muddle his case still more than you have already. But my method is infallible. I have applied it to Molvik as well. I have made him
"daemonic." That's the blister I have to put on his neck.
</sp>
<sp>
<speaker>Gregers.</speaker>
 Is he not really daemonic then?
</sp>
<sp>
<speaker>Relling.</speaker>
```

 What the devil do you mean by daemonic! It's only a piece of gibberish I've invented to keep up a spark of life in him. But for that, the poor harmless creature would have succumbed to self-contempt and despair many a long year ago. And then the old lieutenant! But he has hit upon his own cure, you see.

</sp>

<sp>

<speaker>Gregers.</speaker>

 Lieutenant Ekdal? What of him?

</sp>

<sp>

<speaker>Relling.</speaker>

 Just think of the old bear-hunter shutting himself up in that dark garret to shoot rabbits! I tell you there is not a happier sportsman in the world than that old man pottering about in there among all that rubbish. The four or five withered Christmas-trees he has saved up are the same to him as the whole great fresh Hoidal forest; the cock and the hens are big game-birds in the fir-tops; and the rabbits that flop about the garret floor are the bears

*<note place="foot" xml:id="note5">

</sp>

<sp>

<speaker>Gregers.</speaker>

 Poor unfortunate old man! Yes; he has indeed had to narrow the ideals of his youth.

</sp>

<sp>

<speaker>Relling.</speaker>

 While I think of it, Mr. Werle, junior – don't use that foreign word: ideals. We have the excellent native word: lies.

</sp>

<sp>

<speaker>Gregers.</speaker>

 Do you think the two things are related?

</sp>

```
<sp>
<speaker>Relling.</speaker>
 Yes, just about as closely as typhus and putrid fever.
</sp>
<sp>
<speaker>Gregers.</speaker>
 Dr. Relling, I shall not give up the struggle until I have rescued Hialmar from your clutches!
</sp>
<sp>
<speaker>Relling.</speaker>
 So much the worse for him. Rob the average man of his life-illusion, and you rob him of his happiness at the same stroke. <stage> (To HEDVIG, who comes in from the sitting-room.)</stage> Well, little wild-duck-mother, I'm just

</sp>
<sp>
<speaker>Gregers.</speaker>
 I suppose your courage failed when the time came.
</sp>
<sp>
<speaker>Hedvig.</speaker>
 No, that wasn't it. But when I awoke this morning and remembered what we had been talking about, it seemed so strange.
</sp>
<sp>
<speaker>Gregers.</speaker>
```

```
 Strange?
</sp>
<sp>
<speaker>Hedvig.</speaker>
 Yes, I don't know – Yesterday evening, at the moment, I thought there was something so delightful about it; but since I have slept and thought of it again, it somehow doesn't seem worth while.
</sp>
<sp>
<speaker>Gregers.</speaker>
 Ah, I thought you could not have grown up quite unharmed in this house.
</sp>
<sp>
<speaker>Hedvig.</speaker>
 I don't care about that, if only father would come up –
</sp>
<sp>
<speaker>Gregers.</speaker>
 Oh, if only your eyes had been opened to that <pb n="104"/> which gives life its value – if you possessed the true, joyous, fearless spirit of sacrifice, you would soon see how he would come up to you. – But I believe in you still,
Hedvig.
</sp>
<stage>
 [He goes out by the passage door. HEDVIG wanders about the room for a time; she is on the point of going into the kitchen when a knock is heard at the garret door. HEDVIG goes over and opens it a little; old EKDAL comes out; she pushes the door to again.

    where you're going.

     Do you never want to shoot anything besides the rabbits?
</sp>
<sp>
    <speaker>Ekdal.</speaker>
     Do you think the rabbits aren't good enough?
</sp>
<sp>
    <speaker>Hedvig.</speaker>
     Yes, but what about the wild duck?
</sp>
<sp>
    <speaker>Ekdal.</speaker>
     Ho-ho! are you afraid I shall shoot your wild duck? Never in the world.
        Never.
</sp>
<sp>
    <speaker>Hedvig.</speaker>
     No, I suppose you couldn't; they say it's very difficult to shoot wild ducks.
</sp>
<sp>
    <speaker>Ekdal.</speaker>
     Couldn't! Should rather think I could.
</sp>
<sp>
    <speaker>Hedvig.</speaker>
     How would you set about it, grandfather? – I don't mean with my wild duck, but with others?
</sp>
<sp>
    <speaker>Ekdal.</speaker>
```

 I should take care to shoot them in the breast, you know; that's the surest place. And then you must shoot against the feathers, you see – not the way of the feathers.
</sp>
<sp>
  <speaker>Hedvig.</speaker>
   Do they die then, grandfather?
</sp>
<sp>
  <speaker>Ekdal.</speaker>
   Yes, they die right enough – when you shoot properly. – Well, I must go and brush up a bit. H'm – understand – h'm.
</sp>
<stage> [Goes into his room.</stage>

   [HEDVIG waits a little, glances towards the sitting-room door, goes over to the book-case, stands on tip-toe, takes the double-barrelled pistol duster, comes from the sitting-room. HEDVIG hastily lays down the pistol, unobserved.

Example 1. Adapted from a TEI P4 encoding of Henrik Ibsen's play The Wild Duck (Ibsen, 1918). TEI XML source available from https://xtf.lib.virginia.edu/xtf/view?docId=modern_english/uvaGenText/tei/IbsWild.xml;raw=1.

2. Christopher Marlowe: The Tragedie of Doctor Faustus (B text)

The following example is a fragment (the front matter, scene 2 of the first act, and back matter) of Christopher Marlowe's The Tragedie of Doctor Faustus (B text), encoded and made available by the Perseus Digital Library.

The text of the play is preceded by front matter, consisting of a character list, and a prologue. The character list is encoded as a `<castList>` structure within a `` container in the `<front>` part. The cast list mainly consists of loose descriptions of the roles' names (`<role>`) per character (`<castItem>`); some have a role description in `<roleDesc>`. The "Sins" are grouped in a labeled `<castGroup>` element; another `<castGroup>` groups Charles, Darius, and Alexander without explicit label. The cast list is concluded by a list of minor characters, grouped in a `<castItem type="list">` element, which overrides the default value of "role" for the `@type` attribute on `<castList>`. The front matter is concluded with a prologue (`<prologue>`) consisting of a speech (`<sp>`) of 28 lines (`<l>`) spoken by the Chorus, as indicated by the `@who` attribute on `<sp>`, which refers to the ID code of the Chorus `<role>` in the cast list.

The play is concluded by an 8 line `<epilogue>` (spoken by the Chorus), an `<epigraph>`, and trailing material in `<trailer>`. These are grouped in the `<back>` section.

The body of the play (`<body>`) consists of 20 scenes, grouped into 6 acts. Acts are encoded in `` elements, in which the scenes occur as `` elements. Each speech is marked with `<sp>`, containing the indication of the speaker as it occurs in the source text (`<speaker>`), as well as a formal indication (using the `@who` attribute). Stage instructions are encoded inside `<stage>`. Notice how the first 10 speeches contain paragraphs (``), while the last 4 are made up of verse lines (`<l>`).

Finally, notice how this text is encoded as any other text, resulting in the use of many common TEI elements (`<name>`, `<foreign>`, `<orig>` / `<reg>`, `<add>`, ...). A system of `< milestone unit="page" />` elements is used to mark the page boundaries (as an equivalent to the shorter `<pb>` element), while each visual line break is explicitly marked with a `<lb>` element, if it does not coincide with a verse line.¹

      ....

¹ In this transcription, the `<join>` element is used to group the lines of the play in alternative groups, thus overriding the structural organisation in speeches. Although the purpose of this alternative grouping is unknown to us, it could well be for analytical reasons. The `<join>` element lists pointers to the identification codes of the elements to be grouped as a space-separated list in the `@target` attribute. The purpose of this element is to formally indicate elements that should be joined. The actual join is supposed to be performed in further processing (e.g., by means of XSLT transformations). For a detailed account of the use of `<join>`, see section 16.7 Aggregation of the TEI Guidelines.

Example 2. Adapted from a TEI P4 XML encoding of Christopher Marlowe's play The Tragedie of Doctor Faustus (Marlowe 1616). TEI XML source available from <https://www.perseus.tufts.edu/hopper/dttext?doc=Perseus:text:1999.03.0011>.

3. Herman Melville: Moby-Dick or, The Whale

This example features the first two pages of chapter 40 of Herman Melville's novel Moby-Dick:

This example nicely illustrates a mixture of different genres. The main structure is a novel, divided in chapters, most of which consist of narrative paragraphs. However, this chapter (recognisable as such by the heading "Chapter XL"), has the form of embedded drama, with speeches (<sp>), containing indications of the speaking characters (<speaker>) and the speech contents. Moreover, some of the speeches of this drama fragment consist of prose paragraphs (), while others are expressed in verse lines (<l>). The second speech on p. 214 even mixes paragraphs and verse lines. Notice, also, how stage directions (<stage>) occur between speaker indications and speech contents. The first speech of p. 215 contains an embedded stage direction.

Of course, the main structure of this text will have the form of a novel, consisting of chapter text divisions, without any traditional drama front matter (such as cast lists, epilogues, etc.).

Example 3. TBE-crafted example encoding of Herman Melville's novel Moby Dick (Melville 1922).

4. William Shakespeare: Titus Andronicus

The following example is a fragment (the front matter, and scene 2 of the second act) of William Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus, encoded and made available by the Perseus Digital Library.

The text of the play is preceded by front matter, consisting of a character list, and a prologue. The character list is encoded as a castList structure within a div1 container in the front part. The cast list consists of castItem elements, listing the roles (role) with their description (roleDesc). Each role is identified with the @xml:id attribute. Three named groups of characters are grouped into castGroup elements; one nameless group of minor characters is listed as castItem type="list">. Notice, how in the latter type of lists, both role and roleDesc are used a bit indiscriminate at first sight (e.g., both roleDesc>RomansroleDesc and role xml:id="tit-11">Goths and Romansrole occur). On second sight, however, role appears to be used for all speaking characters, who are formally identified with an @xml:id attribute. The front matter is concluded with a prologue (prologue) consisting of 28 lines spoken by the Chorus. The cast list is succeeded by a general description of the setting in which the action takes place, in the set element.

The body of the play (body) consists of 14 scenes, grouped into 5 acts. Acts are encoded in div1 elements, in which the scenes occur as div2 elements. Each speech is marked with sp, containing the indication of the speaker as it occurs in the source text (speaker), as well as a formal indication (using the @who attribute). Stage instructions are encoded inside stage. The speeches are encoded as verse lines (l) Notice, however, how logical lines (l) are distinguished from typographic lines: the latter are explicitly encoded with the lb element, occurring inside l.²

2 Notice, how the lb elements in this example make use of the @ed (edition) attribute, for indicating the specific edition in which the specific line breaks occur. For an explanation of this feature, see section 3.10.3 Milestone Elements of the TEI Guidelines.

Example 5. Adapted from a TEI P3 SGML encoding of Oscar Wilde's play The Importance of Being Earnest, in the anthology Plays, Prose Writings and Poems by Oscar Wilde (Wilde 1930).

TEI SGML source available from <https://www.ucc.ie/celt/published/E850003-002.sgml>.

The actual text is preceded by a character list and a list of the scenes, both encoded as `` elements inside the `<front>` part of the `<text>`, with appropriate values for their `@type` attributes. The character list is encoded as a plain `<list>` structure, containing `<item>` elements for the characters (divided into sub-lists of male and female characters). Role descriptions are encoded with `<emph>` elements. Whereas the specialised `<castList>`, `<castGroup>` and `<castItem>`, `<role>`, and `<roleDesc>` elements could have been used, this is a perfectly valid (though less expressive) interpretation and application of the TEI elements. The scenes are listed in a `<stage>` element, which is a bit more controversial, as the TEI Guidelines make a clear distinction between the `<stage>` element (stage directions in or in between speeches) and `<set>` (“a description of the setting, time, locale, appearance, etc., of the action of a play, typically found in the front matter of a printed performance text (not a stage direction)”) elements. Because it is wrapped inside a `` structure, this is valid TEI, but the encoding could probably be improved to:

<front xmlns="http://www.tei-c.org/ns/1.0">
  <set>
    <head>THE SCENES OF THE PLAY:</head>
    <list type="simple">
      <item>Act I. Algernon Moncrieff's Flat in Half-Moon Street, W.</item>
      <item>Act II. The Garden at the Manor House, Woolton.</item>
      <item>Act III. Drawing-room at the Manor House, Woolton.</item>
    </list>
  </set>
  <set>TIME: <emph>The Present</emph></set>

The play itself is encoded as a `<div1>` level text division, in which each act is wrapped in a `<div2>` element. Inside the speeches (`<sp>`), the speakers are transcribed as `<speaker>`, and the speech as prose paragraphs (``). Stage directions (`<stage>`) occur between and in the speeches. Notice how at the beginning of the act, the `<view>` element is used inside a stage direction, to describe the visual aspects of the setting. This is probably a liberal interpretation of the semantics of this element, which is more geared to “the visual context of some part of a screen play,” viz. the description of what’s on a screen. The `<view>` element doesn’t seem strictly necessary here: a `<stage type="setting">` would probably convey the same information.
